Early adopters

CIKH develops training and resources of wide relevance. During the development phase, materials may be made available to select partners on a trial basis.

Such beta-testing assists the evaluation of outcomes, and may generate feedback that can be shared with future clients.

Case study | Enhance your EDI-Q

The Cambridge Interfaith Programme is developing religious sensitivities training, to help organisations take the beliefs of clients and colleagues seriously. Ask about a trial session.

Event & corporate sponsorship

From funding flagship initiatives to paying it forward, sponsorship enables us to work with a diverse clientele and sustain a core commitment to catalysing inter-religious understanding and cross-sector partnerships.

CIKH aims to keep event participation affordable and responsive to ability to pay. We rely upon sponsorship and/or benefaction to enable fee reductions and waivers, defraying direct costs such as catering.

More generous sponsorship assists with recovering indirect costs such as administration, helping CIKH sustain a varied programme of events and research activity.

Case study | Leadership in diversity

The Cambridge Interfaith Programme is piloting an extracurricular leadership programme for undergraduates at the University of Cambridge.

Sessions are designed to combine skill development with exploration of contemporary issues related to faith and belief, anchored by CIKH research.

Enquiries are welcomed from partners interested in inputting and/or sponsoring this important work.

If you would be interested in sponsoring CIKH activity, please do not hesitate to ask for further information about what is possible. One-off, individual and corporate sponsorship options are available.
